

TIMOTHY MORONEY LAID AT REST

Large Attendance at the Sacred Heart Cathedral This Morning.

Timothy Moroney was laid at rest this morning in the Catholic cemetery. The funeral was held at the Cathedral of the Sacred Heart and the services were conducted by Rector James M. Hayes, assisted by Rev. Father J. Martiniere and Rev. Father J. P. Lynch.

The attendance of friends of the family, irrespective of creed, was very large and there were a number of beautiful floral offerings. Father Hayes delivered a powerful sermon on death and paid an eloquent tribute to the worth of the departed, who was a devoted churchman all the years of his busy life.

The active pallbearers were Ben E. Cabell, Hugh N. Fitzgerald, E. A. DeWitt, Thomas F. King, Daniel F. Sullivan and A. H. Wilkins. The honorary pallbearers were E. J. Gannon, T. W. Griffith, Joseph W. Dixon, J. B. Adoue, Kearney J. Kivlen and K. Shields. Mr. Wilkins and the deceased had been friends since 1868. Their first meeting was in the city of New Orleans. Mr. Wilkins represented one big New York publishing house and Mr. Moroney another. Although business rivals, they became fast friends and that friendship formed in the Crescent City endured for nearly forty years.

Robinson & Co. 245 Royal St. NEW ORLEANS

Dallas. Timothy Moroney, at one time a prominent citizen of New Orleans, died at the home of his brother, James Moroney, in Dallas, Tex., on Tuesday, Dec. 8. Mr. Moroney came to New Orleans in 1868 as general Southern representative of a firm of school book publishers.

Timothy Moroney had a most eventful career, and his life-story is one of more than usual interest. He was born near Limerick, Ireland, in 1845, and if ever there was a true son of Erin it was "Tim" Moroney. When five years of age he came to America with his parents, and, after spending five years in New York, the family moved to Wisconsin, where the boy grew to manhood. The uprising of the Sioux Indians in 1864 called him into service. Raised in the rough and strenuous environment of the Dakota frontier, Moroney was particularly fitted for a scout, and enlisted in that capacity in the campaign against the Indians. The young man's health was impaired by the hardships of the campaign and he never fully recovered from the effects of this work. After the civil war Mr. Moroney studied law at Ann Arbor, Mich., but owing to delicate health decided to make his home in the South, and he came to New Orleans in 1868 as general Southern representative of a firm of school book publishers. He was a strenuous opponent of the carpet bag regime and for many years was active in the politics of Louisiana. He was ever a loyal Irishman, and versed in the history of his native country and an authority on the Gallic language. He was an enthusiastic worker for the upbuilding of his native land, a charter member of the Irish Land League and was ever liberal in response to calls for assistance from Erin.

Mr. Moroney was a wealthy man, and for some years he had been spending his summers in Eastern Tennessee, where he owned one of the most beautiful estates in the South. He was a man of original character, and one of his idiosyncrasies was that he wanted his summer place well away from the railroad. He bought a large tract of land in Monroe county, Tenn., about forty miles from Knoxville and twenty-five miles from the nearest railroad. The place was situated near the headwater of the Tennessee river, in the heart of the Smokey Mountains, and there, in a bend of the stream, he erected a most interesting and unique dwelling. Upon this mountain home he indulged his every fancy, and an ideal place it was. The house, containing over twenty rooms, was built of gigantic logs from the nearby forests and the interior showed the polished surfaces of these giants of the mountains. The house was handsomely furnished with every elegance and convenience. The place was destroyed by fire about a year ago and its owner was planning to rebuild when death overtook him.

Mr. Moroney kept open house in the summer, and persons from all over the United States visited him in his mountain home. He was the soul of hospitality and his guests were royally entertained.

The news of his death will be learned with regret in many sections of the South, where he had friends. He is survived by one son, Dillon Moroney; two brothers and one sister, of Dallas, Tex. He was a widely-read, much-traveled, witty and generous-hearted man. He was loyal to conviction and friendship, and believed in the principles of Jefferson and the rule of the people.

TIMOTHY MORONEY LAID AT REST

Large Attendance at the Sacred Heart Cathedral This Morning.

Timothy Moroney was laid at rest this morning in the Catholic cemetery. The funeral was held at the Cathedral of the Sacred Heart and the services were conducted by Rector James M. Hayes, assisted by Rev. Father J. Martiniere and Rev. Father J. P. Lynch.

The attendance of friends of the family, irrespective of creed, was very large and there were a number of beautiful floral offerings. Father Hayes delivered a powerful sermon on death and paid an eloquent tribute to the worth of the departed, who was a devoted churchman all the years of his busy life.

The active pallbearers were Ben E. Cabell, Hugh N. Fitzgerald, E. A. DeWitt, Thomas F. King, Daniel F. Sullivan and A. H. Wilkins. The honorary pallbearers were E. J. Gannon, T. W. Griffith, Joseph W. Dixon, J. B. Adoue, Kearney J. Kivlen and K. Shields. Mr. Wilkins and the deceased had been friends since 1868. Their first meeting was in the city of New Orleans. Mr. Wilkins represented one big New York publishing house and Mr. Moroney another. Although business rivals, they became fast friends and that friendship formed in the Crescent City endured for nearly forty years.

Dallas Dies Funeral Over

The funeral of Moroney was held this morning at the Cathedral of the Sacred Heart at 9:30 o'clock. James M. Hayes officiated. Active pallbearers were Ben E. Cabell, Hugh N. Fitzgerald, E. A. DeWitt, Thos. F. King, Daniel F. Sullivan and A. H. Wilkins. Honorary pallbearers were E. J. Gannon, T. W. Griffith, Joseph W. Dixon, J. B. Adoue, Kearney J. Kivlen and K. Shields.

The funeral was one of the largest ever held in Dallas. Many beautiful floral sets were sent. The body was laid to rest in Calvary cemetery with the full ceremony of the Catholic church.

TIMOTHY MORONEY DEAD

Former Oceanian Passes Away in Dallas

Timothy Moroney, at one time prominent citizen of New Orleans, died at the age of 75, on Tuesday, Dec. 8. Mr. Moroney came to New Orleans in 1868 as general Southern representative of a firm of school book publishers.

Timothy Moroney had a most eventful career, and his life story is one of more than usual interest. He was born near Limerick, Ireland, in 1845, and if ever there was a true son of Erin it was "Tim" Moroney. When five years of age he came to America with his parents, and, after spending five years in New York, the family moved to Wisconsin, where the boy grew to manhood. The uprising of the Sioux Indians in 1864 called him into service. Raised in the rough and strenuous environment of the Dakota frontier, Moroney was particularly fitted for a scout, and enlisted in that capacity in the campaign against the Indians. The young man's health was impaired by the hardships of the campaign and he never fully recovered from the effects of this work. After the civil war Mr. Moroney studied law at Ann Arbor, Mich., but owing to delicate health decided to make his home in the South, and he came to New Orleans in 1868 as general Southern representative of a firm of school book publishers. A strenuous opponent of the cause of secession and for many years he was in the politics of Louisiana. He was ever a loyal Irishman, and versed in the history of his native country and an authority on the Gaelic language. He was an enthusiastic worker for the upbuilding of his native land, a charter member of the Irish Land League and was ever liberal in response to calls for assistance from Erin.

Mr. Moroney was a wealthy man, and for some years he had been spending his summers in Eastern Tennessee, where he owned one of the most beautiful estates in the South. He was a man of original character, and one of his idiosyncrasies was that he wanted his summer place well away from the railroad. He bought a large tract of land in Monroe county, Tenn., about forty miles from Knoxville and twenty-five miles from the nearest railroad. The place was situated near the headwater of the Tennessee river, in the heart of the Smokey Mountains, and there, in a bend of the stream, he erected a most interesting and unique dwelling. Upon this mountain home he induced his every fancy and an ideal place it was. The house, containing over twenty rooms, was built of gigantic logs from the nearby forests and the interior showed the polished surfaces of these giants of the mountains. The house was handsomely furnished with every elegance and convenience. The place was destroyed by fire about a year ago and its owner was planning to rebuild when death overtook him.

Mr. Moroney kept open house in the summer, and persons from all over the United States visited him in his mountain home. He was the soul of hospitality and his guests were royally entertained.

The news of his death will be learned with regret in many sections of the South, where he had friends. He is survived by one son, Dillon Moroney, two brothers and one sister of Dallas, Tex. He was a widely-read, much-traveled, witty and generous-hearted man. He was loyal to conviction and friendship, and believed in the principles of Jefferson and the rule of the people.

He received a wound which permanently impaired his health.

In hopes of regaining his health he moved to New Orleans in 1868, being the first of his people to come south. At this time he entered the service of Ivison, Black morning, December 2, Mr. Timothy Moroney in Calvary Cemetery.

ing in the Cathedral by in the sanctuary were inieri, V. G., and Rev. Moroney was a brother William Maroney, and of rs. Dunn, of the Cathedral brother was on a visit ty God called him into owing tribute is from onde:

ey of Louisiana and ded in Dallas this week of his brother, James ceeful character, whose strenuous and whose ul. While yet in his at in the Sioux Indian New Orleans in 1868

e of a great Northern He was a splendid l as a sturdy fighter.

chools, and free edu- en of the masses; he et-baggers and reneack dupes in recon- ight for civic righte- ernment at all times d the fight against Lottery when that he politics of Louis- essional business man, sful leader of men, spot-light positions. ve the world better e was loyal in his

of his convictions, never turned the, witty, affable and ew him were sorry way."

Moroney

ng five years mpanied his in 1855. He y of Wisconsin ag there, he hool at Ann a scout un- the cam- ux Indians ch time he Fought Indians in the Sioux War and Lottery Company in Louisiana.

NOTED GAELIC SCHOLAR

Pioneer School Book Man, Champion of Popular Education and One Who Believed in the People.

After an eventful career, beginning as a scout under General Alfred W. Sully in the Sioux Indian uprising in Minnesota and the Dakotas in 1864 and ending last evening in this city, Timothy Moroney, an enthusiastic Irish-American and worker for the uplifting of his fellowmen, passed away at the home of his brother, James Moroney, at 237 McKinney avenue. Timothy Moroney was born near Limerick, Ireland, Feb. 14, 1845, and was brought to this country in 1850 by his parents to New York. After spending five years in the now metropolis of America, the Moroney family moved to Wisconsin, where Timothy Moroney was reared from boyhood to manhood.

Called into Service.

The uprising of the Sioux Indians in 1864 when the armies of the United States were engaged with those of the Southern Confederacy, called him into service. Raised in the rough and strenuous environment of the Dakota frontier, Timothy Moroney was especially fitted for the services of a scout and enlisted under General Sully in that capacity in the campaign against the warlike Sioux. This campaign and its great privations greatly impaired the young scout's health, from which he never fully recovered.

Studied Law at Ann Arbor.

After the civil war young Moroney studied law in the Ann Arbor University of Michigan. He arrived in New Orleans in 1868 as general Southern representative of Iveson-Blakeman & Co., school book publishers. This was the beginning of his career. He was a strenuous opponent of the carpetbag regime, and drew upon himself the bitter animosity of the then representatives of the Federal government in Louisiana, through his activity in the interest of the Southern people.

A Pioneer Educator.

As the representative of the school-book house he was a constant worker in a common school system and a common education for all in the State of Texas as the "Pioneer School-Book Man."

Fought the Lottery.

Witnessing the evils resulting from the Louisiana Lottery company, Mr. Moroney inaugurated the campaign against this once powerful concern which resulted in driving lotteries of all kinds out of the boundaries of the United States. He was always a builder for his adopted state and many of the wise laws of Louisiana were

A Fine Gaelic Scholar.

Born near the historic walls of Limerick, Mr. Moroney was naturally a loyal son of Erin. He was an enthusiastic worker for the upbuilding of his native land, knew its history from the beginning, and was an authority on the Gaelic tongue. He was a charter member of the Irish Land League, and was ever liberal in response to calls for assistance from old Erin.

His Mountain Home.

Giving up active commercial business some years ago, Mr. Moroney moved to Monroe county, Tennessee, where he built a mountain home, fitted up with every modern convenience of the age. He was one of the principal founders of the Moroney company, dealers in hardware, in this city, in 1875. Several old-time residents of Dallas have been entertained in the East Tennessee home.

A Power in Politics.

In his active years he was a power in the politics of Louisiana and for a quarter of a century enjoyed the confidence of the leading men of that state. His voice was the first in Louisiana to denounce the infamies of lottery rule and he organized the first active opposition to that once powerful enterprise. Never an office seeker or an office-holder, he made unmade public servants when they failed to come up to his ideals.

Fitzpatrick's Friend.

"Honest John" Fitzpatrick, ex-mayor of New Orleans and Democratic leader to-day, and Mr. Moroney were close personal friends for many years and the foe of the lottery company and champion of popular education for the masses, gave Fitzpatrick many a lift in his younger days. Timothy Moroney was a deeply-read, widely-traveled, witty and generous-hearted man. He was loyal to conviction and to friendship and believed in the principles of Jefferson and the rule of the people.

Only Son En Route to Dallas.

Timothy Moroney is survived by a son, Dillon Moroney, who is en route to Dallas from New Orleans. Upon his arrival funeral arrangements will be made. Two brothers, James Moroney and W. J. Moroney, and a sister, Mrs. M. A. Walsh, are well-known residents of Dallas.

Pall Bearers and Hour of Funeral.

The funeral will take place from the residence of James Moroney, 237 McKinney avenue, Wednesday morning. Rev. J. M. Hayes will officiate. The pall-bearers selected are Kane Shields, Ben E. Cabell, Hugh N. Fitzgerald, E. A. DeWitt, Thomas F. King, Kearney J. Kallen, Daniel F. Sullivan and A. H. Williams.

FUNERAL NOTICES.

MORONEY—Timothy Moroney. Funeral at the Cathedral of the Sacred Heart at 9:30 a. m., Dec. 2. Rev. Father James M. Hayes conducting the services. Interment in Calvary Cemetery following the service at the cathedral. Active pallbearers: E. A. DeWitt, Hugh Fitzgerald, Tom King, A. H. Wilkins, Dan Sullivan, Ben E. Cabell; honorary pallbearers: E. J. Gannon, K. J. Kivlin, K. Shields, T. W. Griffith, J. B. Adoue, Joseph W. Dickson.

MORONEY—Timothy Moroney died at the residence of his brother, James Moroney, 237 McKinney, aged 62 years. Funeral services at the Sacred Heart Cathedral this morning at 9:30, when Father J. M. Hayes will say requiem mass. Interment Calvary.

*Brother Jim died
Monday night
Nov. 30, 1908*

TIMOTHY MORONEY DEAD.

Former Orleanian Passes Away in Dallas.

Timothy Moroney, at one time a prominent citizen of New Orleans, died at the home of his brother, James Moroney, in Dallas, Tex., on Tuesday, Dec. 8. Mr. Moroney came to New Orleans in 1868 as general Southern representative of a firm of school book publishers.

Timothy Moroney had a most eventful career, and his life-story is one of more than usual interest. He was born near Limerick, Ireland, in 1845, and if ever there was a true son of Erin, it was "Tim" Moroney. When five years of age he came to America with his parents, and, after spending five years in New York, the family moved to Wisconsin, where the boy grew to manhood. The uprising of the Sioux Indians in 1864 called him into service. Raised in the rough and strenuous environment of the Dakota frontier, Moroney was particularly fitted for a scout, and enlisted in that capacity in the campaign against the Indians. The young man's health was impaired by the hardships of the campaign and he never fully recovered from the effects of this work. After the civil war Mr. Moroney studied law at Ann Arbor, Mich., but owing to delicate health decided to make his home in the South, and he came to New Orleans in 1868 as general Southern representative of a firm of school book publishers. He was a strenuous opponent of the carpet bag regime and for many years was active in the politics of Louisiana.

He was ever a loyal Irishman, well versed in the history of his native country and an authority on the Gallic language. He was an enthusiastic worker for the upbuilding of his native land, a charter member of the Irish Land League and was ever liberal in response to calls for assistance from Erin.

Mr. Moroney was a wealthy man, and for some years he had been spending his summers in Eastern Tennessee, where he owned one of the most beautiful estates in the South. He was a man of original character, and one of his idiosyncrasies was that he wanted his summer place well away from the railroad. He bought a large tract of land in Monroe county, Tenn., about forty miles from Knoxville and twenty-five miles from the nearest railroad. The place was situated near the headwater of the Tennessee river, in the heart of the Smokey Mountains, and there, in a bend of the stream, he erected a most interesting and unique dwelling. Upon this mountain home he indulged his every fancy, and an ideal place it was. The house, containing over twenty rooms, was built of gigantic logs from the nearby forests and the interior showed the polished surfaces of these giants of the mountains. The house was handsomely furnished with every elegance and convenience. The place was destroyed by fire about a year ago and its owner was planning to rebuild when death overtook him.

Mr. Moroney kept open house in the summer, and persons from all over the United States visited him in his mountain home. He was the soul of hospitality and his guests were royally entertained.

The news of his death will be learned with regret in many sections of the South, where he had friends. He is survived by one son, Dillon Moroney; two brothers and one sister, of Dallas, Tex. He was a widely-read, much-traveled, witty and generous-hearted man. He was loyal to conviction and friendship, and believed in the principles of Jefferson and the rule of the people.

FUNERAL OF MRS. E. A. DUNN

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Dunn, sister of James Moroney of this city, died at the home of her brother, 237 McKinney avenue, at 9:15 o'clock last night. Mrs. Dunn had lived at the place of her decease for the last ten years. She numbered her friends by the score in this city, and was ever forward in church and philanthropic effort. She was born in Pittsfield, Mass., in 1852, and was married at D. J. Dunn in New Orleans in 1875. Mr. Dunn died in 1902.

The deceased is survived by two brothers, James and William J. Moroney, and one sister, Mrs. M. A. Walsh. Funeral services will be held from the family residence at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning to the Sacred Heart cathedral, where Father O'Connor will conduct the services at 9:15 o'clock. Interment will be made in Calvary cemetery.

The pallbearers will be: E. J. Riley, T. F. King, Kane Shields, Charles Sorg, C. E. Dickson, J. B. Adoue, T. W. Griffiths and Ben E. Cabell.

DUNN—On Wednesday, May 28, 1902, at 4 p. m., DENNIS J. DUNN, aged fifty-eight years.

The funeral will take place from the residence of his brother, M. F. Dunn, 1805 St. Andrew street, May 29, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Interment private.

SHREVEPORT.

The River Declining and the Railroads Out of Danger—Death of the Wife of Postmaster McKenna.

[SPECIALS TO THE PICAYUNE.]

SHREVEPORT, La., Jan. 29.—The river declined 4-10 of a foot in the past 24 hours, leaving it 25 2-10 above low water. Weather clear and pleasant. The river is reported rising slowly at Fulton.

Mr. I. Hardy, of the Queen and Crescent Route, General Freight and Ticket Agent of V. and M. and V., S. and P., arrived from Vicksburg to-night to meet Mr. W. W. Finley, Freight Agent of T. and P., for a conference regarding through freights.

Referring to the condition of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railway, Mr. Hardy said he felt safe in saying that all present danger of the overflow of the road between Monroe and Vicksburg had passed, and the indications were that navigation, which has been cut off by ice, would be resumed in a few days.

Mrs. Sarah McKenna, wife of Postmaster McKenna, of this city, died yesterday near El Paso, Tex. She had been to Mexico in search of relief from consumption, and died on her way back home.